Rachel Peter spent six months looking for a job after she passed the Sudan School Certificate . Wherever she applied for work , she was told that unless she had skills in computing , it would be difficult to find a job. In spite of the difficulties , Rachel did not give up. She continued hunting looking for a job with other friends. Finally she decided to enrol in the Spine Computer College in Khartoum. After one year there , she was awarded a diploma in computer management.

Immediately after that , Rachel applied for a job advertised in one of the local newspapers. This time Rachel attached her school certificate , the computer diploma and two recommendations from the people who knew her. A week later , she was invited to go for an interview. Rachel was the third on the list of ten applicants who had come to the interview. She waited anxiously for her turn to come. The bell rang and the secretary told Rachel to go in. She was told to sit down at the end of a long table. On each side sat two members of the board and the chairperson sat at the head of the table opposite her.

Are you Rachel Peter ? the chairperson asked . " Yes, sir, I am." " You told us you are interested in working in our computer section," "Yes, that's right," said Rachel . " I have just completed a one year course in computer management and I am very interested in working with you."

"Good," said Mr. Alpayo , the chairperson , smiling . " My colleagues here , have some questions to ask you." "Thank you, Mr. Alpayo," Said Mr. John. "Rachel, can you type?" asked Mr. John "Yes, Sir, I can do fifty words per minute," Rachel replied. " I can see that your spoken English is very good. What about your written English," asked Mr. Ibrahim.

"At school I always got A or B+ for my essays. I also teach English composition to some of my neighbours so I learn while correcting their mistakes," Rachel replied.

"Can you tell us what you have learned in your computer studies," Mr. John continued .

Rachel answered politely and in a relaxed way . At last Mr. Alpayo thanked Rachel
